"He is the most joyous and gladsome of Bards; singing like the grasshopper, as if he would never grow old. His poems resemble a luxuriant meadow, full of kingcups and wild flowers, or a July firmament sparkling with a myriad of Stars. His fancy fed upon all the fair and sweet things of nature; it is redolent of roses and jessamine; it is as light and airy as the thistle-down, or the bubbles which laughing boys blow into the air, where they float in a waving line of beauty."—Retrospective Review.

"Marot's distinguishing excellence is a naïveté, or assumed simplicity, of which it is high praise to say, that it was the model of La Fontaine. His style of humour, than which nothing is more sprightly or diverting, seems much less indigenous among ourselves, if we may judge by our older literature, than either among the French or Italians."—Hallam.

492 SEVEN SAGES (The) in Scottish Metre, by JOHN ROLLAND of Dalkeith, edited by David Laing, BLACK LETTER, thick 4to. 35s. Edinb. 1837

The collection of tales entitled "the Seven Sages," or "the Seven Wise Masters of Rome," may be regarded as one of the most popular works of fiction, of the middle ages. "Few works," says Mr. Dunlop, "are more interesting and curious than the Seven Wise Masters, in illustrating the genealogy of fiction, in its rapid and almost unaccountable transition from one country to another.
